Excerpt: . . . PREFACE. T N tuesenng this volume to the public, I have bnt i w -v ords of preface to offer. Those sketches pertaining to ray own caree as a detective have been taken at random from the thousands of incidents which have occurred during my detective experience, and are simply a sample of the numberles: circumstanes daily occurring, that, like swift shuttles, have woven back and forth, over and under, through anc. through, my large business the golden threads of humor and the sable threads of pathos and sorrow. Of the criminal reminiscences gathered together, I claim no particular merit of originality for, o1 of them. They are merely memories of the past, in a criminal sense--of occurrences ripe with thrilling interest in theii time, and still full of fascination and attractiveness , and of men, brilliant, talented men, who have lived their unworthy lives...
